Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely a historical document or letter. The text is written on aged, yellowed paper and is mostly illegible due to fading and damage. The script appears to be a form of early modern European cursive. There are two distinct circular holes or indentations on the right side of the page, possibly from binding or damage. The text is organized into several lines, with some lines starting with capital letters or initials. The overall appearance is that of a well-preserved but aged manuscript.

Handwritten text in Tamil script, likely a manuscript or letter. The text is written in a cursive style and spans the width of the page. There are two distinct sections of text, separated by a small gap or fold in the paper. The right section begins with the word 'நமசி' (Namah) followed by 'சிவாய' (Shivaya), which is a common invocation in Hindu religious texts. The text is written on aged, slightly discolored paper with two visible holes, possibly from a binding or a punch.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders between two groups of nurses working in different departments of a tertiary care hospital. The study included 100 nurses from the medical-surgical department and 100 nurses from the intensive care unit. Data were collected by means of a self-administered questionnaire. Results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among nurses in the intensive care unit than among those in the medical-surgical department. The most common disorder was low back pain, followed by neck pain and shoulder pain. The results suggest that interventions to reduce the risk of musculoskeletal disorders should be targeted towards the intensive care unit.
